

Position Statement in Support of Animal Research Activities

In the land-grant tradition, scientists at CSU utilize laboratory animals in research endeavors that benefit society. This research has enhanced our understanding of how human and animal diseases can be treated and led to the development of lifesaving procedures and medicines. CSU is committed to the appropriate care, use and humane treatment of animals used for teaching and research. We expect that each faculty member, staff member, or student involved in the use of animals will uphold principles and policies that will promote and protect animal welfare within the instructional, extension, and research programs of the University.
